

Rosie Brown is a recent addition to the Central District of Illinois, as an AFPD in the trial unit. Prior to joining that district, Rosie worked as an attorney with the National Sentencing Resource Counsel Project (SRC), and was tasked with drafting and submitting comments to proposed regulations issued by the U.S. Sentencing Commission and preparing for public hearings on behalf of the federal defender community. While with the SRC, Rosie also provided litigation support and training to the federal defender community and CJA panel.

Previously, Rosie was an AFPD in the trial unit for the Eastern District of Tennessee and served as a staff attorney at the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. She received her bachelor's degree from The American University and her law degree from the Fordham University School of Law.
